

A COMEDY OF MURDER.

"Two Unfortunate Maidens," a comedy in which there were two murders and a number of fistic encounters, was presented by the Chinese Theatrical Company at the Windsor Theatre last evening and was seemingly enjoyed by the small audience of Mongolians present.

The occasion was marked by the appearance of Sean-Sung-Hong with the company. He arrived quite lately from San Francisco, where he is said to be rated as a regular Kyrle Bellew. He bears no resemblance, however, to the latter.

Sean-Sung-Hong made an excellent impression in the comedy part of a rich old man who was desirous of marrying his daughter to money.

The members of the company all wore new costumes, and Taka-Wing, as a persecuted maiden, must have made the hearts of some of the Chinamen in the audience beat faster than usual.
