A LITTLE POEM BY A LITTLE PERSON. O, the little wife she frowned a frown, And the little man he sat bim down; Then the little wife she cried "O dear!" And wiped from the little eyes a tear.

Then the little man—he had a heart— From out his little seat did start, And kneit him at her little feet, And cried so softly, "Tell me, Sweet,

10, dear! I think it is so mean I have to use that big machine That treads so hard. Its horrid dia Makes me so TIRED; it is a sin!"

And he went down town on a little run, and stopped on Fourth, 171.

And he cried, "Send to my little wife Your little Gem, 'twill sawe her life," And do you see my little joke? Now there are several little fols.
